INTRODUCTION.

To the Class of Eighty-six:

It gives me great pleasure to offer you this, the first Class Report. Those of you who have very kindly and promptly answered my requests for information I wish to thank; and Mr. James A. Frye, in particular, I have to thank for very great help in the preparation of this Report. The contents are similar to those of the first reports of previous classes, and will, therefore, I hope, prove a not less interesting record of four years of college life. Mistakes, there must be: forgive and correct them.

The next Report, due in 1889, will be a record of your personal fortunes, and I hope that you will not find it a disagreeable duty to make such an account interesting by writing me occasionally any news of '86 men.

We shall entertain the Class of '87 next Commencement in some room on the College Yard. Notices will be published in the Boston Herald and Advertiser, and the more important ones in the New York Times.

Your classmate,

JOHN H. HUDDLESTON.

DECEASED.

JULIUS WARREN STRAUSS.

Julius Warren Strauss, the second son of Philip and Amelia (Goldenberg) Strauss, was born in Boston, Massachusetts, June 17, 1864, and died May 9, 1885, his sudden death being caused by kidney disease.

Strauss fitted for Harvard at the Boston Latin School, where he made an enviable record, not only in scholarship, but also in deportment. In 1879 he received a prize for Exemplary Conduct and Punctuality, and at the annual exhibition of the school in 1882 he was awarded a third prize for declamation.

In 1882 he entered college, passing "with credit" the examinations in Prescribed Physics and French. His college course was marked by the same excellence in studies that he had shown in his school work, while he still found time to give some attention to athletics.

Strauss was of a genial nature, and was liked by everybody with whom he came in contact, while he made many firm friends among the men in his society, the Everett Athenæum.

SELWYN LEWIS HARDING.

Selwyn Lewis Harding died January 7, 1887, of peritonitis. An account of his life will appear in the Second Report.
